John Trimble, the great Union man of Nashville, has made his slaves—thirteen in number—a present of their freedom. This excellent man and his whole family are, and have been, unconditionally loyal.

Last week, Mrs. Trimble visited one of her former servants, and was visited in turn this week. Mrs.

Trimble states that this is the happiest moment of her life. The slaves of Mr. Trimble have been the slaves been and ended the same as the first, Von Schack's horse making it in 2:50 without an effort. The Judges accordingly awarde two-thirds of the purse to Von Schack's horse, and the balance to Col. Kelley's. To those who knew the inder of the successful horse to be Count Von Blucher, their and of "Old Blucher," the race had additional interest. Times have indeed changed, when a descendant of "Old Blucher," can win a hurdle-race on St. Patrick's day, in the camp of an American army.

The races baving ended, Gen. Meagher invited his guest to accompany him to Brigade Headquarters,

During the recess, many officers, and the more daring and sprightly of the ladies, practiced on the course, in leaping their horses over the hurdles and across the ditches. This practice afforded much wild amusement, which often turned the laugh against some unfortunate experimenter, whose horse lodged him in the ditch, with three feet in depth of muddy water in the bottom. One man was thrown into a some unfortunate experimenter, whose horse lodged him in the dutch, with three feet in depth of muddy water in the bottom. One man was thrown into a ditch, his horse on top of him, and still another horse and rider on both; he was soon fished out, a most pitable looking object. Strange to say, "nobody whs hurt." At one time, two riders, Capt. O'Keef and Sergt. Briggs came in collision, at a line gallop. Both horses and men dropped to the ground as if shot. O'Keef get up again, but his horse is pertunently disabled. Sergt. Briggs was insensible for some minutes, and was carried to the hospital. His ingries are regarded as not serious, and to-night he is doing well. His horse was killed on the spot.

Just after the foot race had come off, it was reported that heavy firing had been heard on the right, believed to be at Uoited States Ford. Gen. Mengher immediately announced that the festivities were at an end, and at once ordered his brigade to fall in under arms. The men dropped their sports, and trushed to arms with as much good cheer and alacrity as, during the day, they had joined in the festivities.

MYSTERIOUS DISAPPEARANCE OF A MAN AT SEA.

Charles Smith and Herman Sanstrand, seamen on board the ship Tallsman, were examined on a charge of minoring Errs Thomas, the third mate of that vessel. The evidence went to show that Thomas was forward; a cry was raised of "a man overboard," and the next morning Thomas was missing, and blood was found in the forecastle. These was no proof to show whether deceased jumped everboard or was thrown over, and none to show that the prisoners had had any struggle with him. The Commissioner therafere ordered their discharge.
